Introducing Jason and Mike, spokesmice for the quiet name change.

Appomattox High School, Class of 1932 Reunion, 1976

It was "school days, school days" once again for the Class of 1932 of Appomattox High School. Observing their forty-fourth reunion, twelve members of this class, with husbands and wives, met on Saturday night, Sept. 25, at 6:30 p.m. at the old Evergreen School for a covered dish supper and session for reminiscing.

For this occasion, the school originally a one room structure, later expanded to two rooms) took on the atmosphere of a classroom once again. Using a Bicentennial theme with the colors red, white, and blue predominating, the local committee attractively decorated the hall with bulletin boards featuring important events in the history of the class, a bell, a cake with an apple for the teacher, and even a slate with the words: I love you, Jo. Table decorations further carried the color scheme, even to lower arrangements.

Summoned to dinner by ringing the hand bell, members of the class and their guests served themselves from a great variety of delicious and tempting dishes. One lady was overheard saying sadly: "My plate is filled and I am only halfway down the line." All agreed that a covered dish meal prepared by classmates provided a very special atmosphere for enjoyment. Much reminiscing was interspersed with the meal and "it just so happened" that many had snapshots of children and grandchildren to pass around proudly.

Following dinner, Garland Plunkett, class president, using the hand bell once again, called a business meeting to order. Among items discussed were plans for the next reunion and messages from absent members. The group accepted the invitation of a classmate Malcolm Booker to hold the next reunion at his home, Beverly Plantation, on Friday, June 24, 1977.

Of the 29 surviving members of the Class of 1932, 12 (all from Virginia) attended the 1976 reunion. Those present were: Malcolm Booker, Lula Drinkard Gibson, Vera Kern Moore, Catherine Lucado Perdue, Hilda Moore, Rachel Morris Day, Ruth Morris Jennings, Claudine O'Brien, Garland Plunkett, Blass Ranson, Ruby Wooldridge Hamilton, and Weselene Young Wooldridge.

Mrs. Clarkie Evans Ranson, although unable to attend, sent a beautiful floral arrangement. Several others sent notes and pictures, or telephoned their regrets. The attendees sent messages to those unable to be present.

The Class of 1932 is very proud of its member, Miss Hazel Moon, who has served for many years as a missionary nurse in Nigeria. past reunions have been arranged to coincide with her furloughs, thus making it possible for her to attend all previous ones with one exception.

FOOD SHOPPER

by
Susan K. Simpson
Virginia Department of Agriculture and Commerce

"To market, to market to buy a fat pig—" No more! That ditty, chanted by children for years, is not nearly accurate these days. Today's "porker" is a little different breed than those of days gone by. "Leaner and trimmer" might be a better description. It is higher in protein and lower in fat, with more edible meat than twenty years ago. Actually, the average of all cuts shows pork 140 degrees F., far below the new pork cookery research-recommended internal temperature of 170 degrees F. Interesting enough, the previously recommended higher temperature of 185 degrees F., was never necessary to insure safety, but rather to "melt away" yesterday's heavy fat. recent research has shown that today's "well-done" 170 degrees F. creates a product which is delicious and tender.

Since pork supplies at retail meat counters are picking up, why not get reacquainted with the delicious "new" pork? And, since apple harvest time is here, why not team the best with the best? Pork and apples, prepared in any way, are just natural go-alongs.

For some up-to-date information on the "new" pork along with the newer recommended cooking times and temperatures and storage guidelines, request a free copy of the brochure, "How to Enjoy Virginia Pork." Send your request to Va. Dept. Of Agriculture and Commerce, P. O. Box 1163, Richmond, Va. 23209.
